

The Paul Peck Humanities Institute, Department of World Languages and Philosophy, and Study Abroad & International Education invite you to our inaugural Intercultural Learning Series:

Linguistic Contact Zones Between Spanish and English: Bilingualism in Sports Journalism with Telemundo's Moisés Linares

Moisés Linares (Twitter)

- In this thought-provoking intercultural event, we will explore the various ways in which Spanish and English coexist in the United States. We will unspool questions of language maintenance, national and cultural identity, the role of the U.S. Spanish-language media, as well as issues of language policy.
- Professor Eddy Arana (World Languages, Spanish and German/PPHI Honors Internships) will facilitate an engaging talk about the local manifestations of linguistic contact zones between Spanish and English in our DMV regions.

- Our featured guest speaker, local sports journalist, Moisés Linares, will share remarks about his personal and professional journey as a bilingual sports anchor with Telemundo 44/NBC 4.

Attendees will be invited to ask questions at the end of each event language segment.

Date: 3/25/21

Times: This is a dual-language event.

1. 10:30 am-11:25 am English-language event
2. 11:30 am-12:30 pm Spanish-language event

Note: This event will be recorded. If you do not wish to appear on camera or audio, please mute your microphone and turn off your camera.

Paul Peck Humanities Institute Honors Internships: Showcasing Successful Intern Research

Joins us for a collaborative event between MC's PPHI Honors Internship Program and the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History (NMAH).

- Former PPHI intern, Nyrene Monforte (MC '21) and Project Lead, Patty Arteaga (NMAH), will share remarks on their work on the NMAH's Undocumented Organizing Collecting Initiative. Said initiative is a "three-year project tracing the emergence of undocumented youth activism over the past twenty years by recording, analyzing, and interpreting political strategies via the collection of oral histories and objects."

Monarch wings are an important symbol to undocumented organizers. Each year, monarch butterflies take flight across the North American continent to survive. The butterflies' journey speaks to migration, survival, transformation, and the power of communities. These wings will be exhibited in the National Museum of American History's upcoming show Girlhood (It's complicated), opening on June 12, 2020.

- Our moderator, Prof. Eddy Arana (PPHI Honors Internship Program Coordinator and World Languages faculty--Spanish and German) will lead an inspiring interdisciplinary and collaborative event. General information about PPHI Honors Internships and other internship opportunities at the SNMAH will be provided.

Attendees will be invited to ask questions of our two presenters at the end of event.

Note: This event will be recorded, except for the Q&A portion. If you do not wish to appear on camera or audio, please mute your microphone and turn off your camera.
